

FCC:In regard to the "Do Not Call" rule, I would like to make the following comments.

Since we in Indiana have implemented our "Telephone Privacy" law, I rarely receive those very annoying and unwanted calls from telemarketers. I honestly can't remember when I got the last one!

My fear is that if a more lenient Federal law supersedes our State law the nuisance calls will return.

Why can't we have both? I'm an industrial electrician and realize that the National Electrical Code is the law unless a more stringent state or local code is in place.

Why not have a Federal law, but allow states to have a code that may be more effective for their particular state?

Thanks for your consideration,

Stephen Geis
